Education

Jones had a college education in science, art and history and lots of useless information and highbrow lore that's Greek to me. He is a human dictionary of things that happened long ago; of Carthage, Rome or Canterbury there's nothing that he doesn't know. Brown never had a chance at college—his parents couldn't stand the cost—but when it comes to useful knowledge of timely things he's never lost because he always reads the paper and learns what happens every day. If King or Kaiser cuts a caper Brown knows about it right away. He's posted on the new inventions that prove what Sherman said of war, he knows a submarine's dimensions and every baseball player's score. While Jones continues with his delving for ancient lore that counts for naught, Brown knows what's on each merchant's shelving and where the bargains can be bought. The kindly rays from Wisdom's taper Brown's youth did not illuminate, but faithful reading of his paper keeps him informed and up-to-date. The kind of useful facts he's gaining have helped him gather in the bones; despite his "lack of early training," he's worth ten times as much as Jones. WILL MOORE.

"If you want a comfort in the house, get one of these instantaneous heaters. It keeps the whole family in hot water all the time."
"Don't need it. My wife attends to that."—Baltimore American.

Far Enough Away
Mother—I hear that Harry Smith is the worst boy in school, and I want you to keep as far away from him as possible.
Tommy—I do, ma. He is always at the head of our class.

The Young Lady Across the Way

We asked the young lady across the way if she had studied the events of the war serialism and she said she certainly wouldn't do it any other way and there surely wasn't anything funny about it.
